NOWHERE TO HIDE

Fatal domestic assaults are on the rise in San Antonio. To understand why, the Express-News conducted more than 75 interviews with police, prosecutors, judges and experts. Reporters sought out survivors of abuse and listened to their stories. They scoured police reports, court files and other records to create a comprehensive database of family violence fatalities.

By EMILIE EATON and MELISSA FLETCHER STOELTJE | Staff writers

Mariuela Cadena tried to hide from Andrew Munoz. But he knew where she worked: at a Subway restaurant on the South Side.

FIRST IN A SERIES

THE VICTIM

Mariuela Cadena was married, the busy mother of three children, to love her bad beaters for time and again.

She had called San Antonio police, but the experience hadn't inspired confidence in them. Even after a brutal attack, it took four months for prosecutors to file a misdemeanor assault charge against Andrew Munoz.

Ten more months went by before police arrested him. Only then, the abuse escalated but once more, punching her in the head and stomach.

Despite his lengthy criminal record, Munoz was released from jail the next day on a $5,000 bond.

When Cadena blocked his calls, he turned more violent. He kidnapped her at gunpoint and forced her to drive to a remote ranch in southern Bexar County. On the way, he fired a gun through the roof of the car, leaving no doubt he was willing and able to kill her and her family.

Cadena, then 43, gave desperate, she tried to hide. She had moved out of her home on the far East Side and was getting ready to move again. She had changed her name and her daughters. She applied for a protective order.

But Munoz knew where to find her: at the Subway restaurant on South Roosevelt and Loop 410, where she had worked her way up to manager.

THE PROBLEM

After declaring for decades, intimate partner homicides have dropped in Bexar County and across the United States beginning in 2005. The jump in both intimate partner killings and family violence

Mariuela Cadena was terrified of her ex-boyfriend, Andrew Munoz. She doubted police could protect her from him.

$47B aims to prepare U.S. for toll of warming

By Coral Davenport and Christopher Flavelle

WASHINGTON — The $1 trillion infrastructure bill headed to President Joe Biden's desk includes the largest amount of money ever spent by the United States to prepare the nation to withstand the devastating impacts of climate change.

The $47 billion in the bill designated for "climate resilience" is intended to help communities prepare for the new age of extreme fires, floods, storms and droughts that scientists say are worsened by human-caused climate change.

The money is the most explicit signal yet from the federal government that the economic damages of a warming planet have already begun to hit home, and comes with bipartisan support reflecting a tacit acknowledgment of that but by at least some Republicans, though many of the party's leaders still question or deny the established science of human-caused climate change.

Hamilton mayor decries loss of health powers

Measures passed in Nashville late last month during a special legislative session would revoke many of Hamilton County's rights to make its own decisions about how to respond to the COVID-19 pandemic.

The bills await action by Gov. Bill Lee, but should they become law they will mean the county cannot determine when or for how long to implement a mask mandate.

"We'll obviously comply with what we have to, but, again, the people closest to the people should be making those decisions, in my opinion."

— JIM COPPINGER, HAMILTON COUNTY MAYOR

Authority to quarantine a person or business in response to COVID-19 would shift to the state.

The choice by state legislators, including nearly all members of Hamilton County's delegation, to take back decision-making powers from counties with independent health departments to Nashville angered some local officials, including Hamilton County Mayor Jim Coppinger.

COVID-19 hospital patients allowed one visitor

Tennessee hospitals may soon be forced to allow visitors for coronavirus patients under a bill they are signing a bill passed by the Tennessee General Assembly in its recent special session.

The bill states "a hospital shall not restrict a patient from having at least one (1) family member present with the patient during the stay in the hospital as long as the family member tests negative for COVID-19 and is not exhibiting symptoms of COVID-19 or another virus or communicable disease."

But there appears to be a difference of opinion between the sponsor of Republican House Speaker Cameron Sexton and Republican Lt. Gov. Randy McNally, the Senate speaker, on how to implement the new visitation requirement — which took the Tennessee Hospital Association by surprise when it was added at the tail end of the session.

"We do have some concerns regarding a late addition to the legislation dealing with visitation for COVID patients and how that provision will ultimately be implemented," Dr. Wendy Long, president and CEO

INFRASTRUCTURE

Biden hails budget win as a 'step forward'

BY ALAN FRAM AND ZEKE MILLER
THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Joe Biden on Saturday hailed Congress' passage of his $1 trillion infrastructure package as a "monumental step forward for the nation" after House fellow Democrats resolved months-long standoff in their ranks to seal the deal.

"Finally, infrastructure week," a beaming Biden told reporters. "I'm so happy to say that: infrastructure week."

The House passed the measure 228-206 late Friday, prompting prolonged cheers from the relieved Democratic side of the chamber. Thirteen Republicans, mostly moderates, supported the legislation, which Biden signed earlier Saturday. Six members opposed it.

Approval of the bill, which promises to create legions of jobs and improve broadband, water systems and other public works, now sends it to the desk of a president whose approval ratings have sagged and whose nervous party got a cold shoulder from voters in this past week's off-year elections.

Democratic candidates for governor were defeated in Virginia and squeaked through in New Jersey amid voter frustration. The setbacks made gains by Republican moderates and liberals allies — important to produce impactful legislation and demonstrate the know how to govern. Democrats can ill afford to seem in disarray year before midterm elections that could give Republicans congressional majorities.

Voters "want us to deliver," Biden said, and Friday's vote "proves we can."

"On one big item, we delivered," he added.

The infrastructure package would provide billions for projects across the nation, from repairs to its breadth to the building of the interstate highway system in the last century or the transcontinental railroad the century before. He called it a "blue collar blueprint for rebuilding America."

His reference to infrastructure week was a jab at the White House of Donald Trump, who

Kimball used Army lessons learned to build career as dentist

BY BOB DARY
CONTRIBUTOR

When it was time for Jim Kimball to make a decision about college, there wasn't much to consider.

It was 1964, and he was graduating from McCallie, then a military prep school. He said he'd been a good enough football player to draw interest from Ivy League schools, Auburn and Vanderbilt, among others, but he knew he was headed elsewhere.

"My father was thinking I was likely to get drafted, and that I'd be better prepared coming from West Point," Kimball recalled. "He let me visit UT and Vanderbilt, but I didn't apply anywhere but West Point."

Jim Kimball
Age: 75
Branch of military: U.S. Army
Years of service: 1964-1971

Once at the U.S. Military Academy, Kimball opted for infantry training. That meant Ranger School, which is described on the Army's official website as "one of the toughest training courses for which a soldier can volunteer ... for more than two months, Ranger students train to exhaustion, pushing the limits of their mental endurance."

Kimball wouldn't have had it any other way.

"Best military training I ever had," he said. "I was never in a Ranger unit, but I was Ranger-qualified — I had all the skills."
